What do individuals in HR do?

• Human resource managers are involved in activities designed to ensure that an organization is effectively utilizing all employees so that it may achieve its strategic objectives.

• Human resource managers develop systems for recruiting, hiring and promoting employees; ensuring a competitive compensation and benefits program; training and developing employees; providing accurate and useful employee performance appraisals; and ensuring that an organization abides by legal regulations concerning employment practices.

• Director of human resources, recruiter, compensation analyst, affirmative action officer, and labor-relations specialist are just a few of the possible careers in human resource management.
What does HR Managers do?

• Employees in HR begin in either a recruitment, payroll or assistant role regardless of their level of education

• A more senior person may create fair and equitable compensation plans, ensure compliance with regulations, coach managers through employee issues

• A very senior HR Leader works with the CEO to ensure that the company’s vision can be executed through HR

• What should students know when choosing HR as their major?
  ▫ To gain a seat at the executive table you must have strong business acumen coupled with strong financial knowledge
  ▫ You need to support all requests for training, for additional employees, for new programs, etc. with a financial ROI
