

Karena Steele, a former American Red Cross volunteer at WBMAC, is committed to serving the El Paso-Juarez border community through health policy and education. As a first-generation Hispanic female graduate student in the Public Health program, she is dedicated to addressing women's health disparities, with a particular interest in reproductive health and rights. She is eager to expand her expertise and forge partnerships with community organizations to create a lasting and meaningful impact.