

Marissa Gonzalez is a public health professional and U.S. Air Force veteran with over a decade of experience in emergency and global health. Her expertise spans project management, emergency preparedness and response, mental and behavioral health, and policy advocacy, with a strong passion for veterans' health and addressing systemic inequities. Dedicated to lifelong learning, Marissa is completing her Master's in Public Health and pursuing a Doctor of Public Health (DrPH). She envisions creating sustainable programs, shaping health policy, and serving as an advocate for vulnerable communities worldwide.