A Statement of Purpose is one component of a successful application to graduate school and can be challenging to do well.

It tells the admissions committee who you are and how you would benefit from —and contribute— to their program.

- Who? Name the professors you have worked with and those you are interested in working with.
- What? Describe yourself, your family, your community, motivations, experiences and expectations.
- Where? Describe relevant past experiences: jobs, community activities, leadership roles, awards, honors. Make sure to include how these experiences have added value to you, and how your participation added value to those organizations.

- Why? Describe the reasons you want to study in this field. Why this school? This program?

Get others to help — faculty, friends, the Writing Center. Edit your drafts to make it interesting, unique, and tell your story in a way that will captivate the admission's committee.
