

A personal statement is essentially your opportunity to introduce yourself to a university's graduate or professional school's admissions committee. It should demonstrate your personality and intellect while briefly describing your academic background and interest in pursuing an advanced degree. This also serves as a sample of your writing skills.

Things to Consider Before Writing:

Know Your Audience

- Your letter should allow the admin committee to see that you are an exceptional fit for their program by virtue of your relevant undergraduate body of work (i.e. undergraduate research, internships, GPA).
- It needs to persuade them that you are an individual with unique contributions that will work to advance their academic community.
- Give them a clear picture of who you are and what you have to offer, and which aligns with their program.
- Research the program you are applying to carefully and identify faculty members that share your academic interests.
- Proofread! Have your letter reviewed by multiple eyes and be open-minded about the advice and feedback you receive.
- Remember that genuine enthusiasm goes a long way towards increasing your odds for admission.

Know Yourself

In order to undertake the task of writing an effective personal statement, it is necessary to know who you are and to underscore the qualities that make you a distinct candidate to that specific program.

Think of your academic and personal trajectory:

- Why are you interested in attending graduate school? More specifically, why are you applying to that particular program?
- Where do you see yourself upon completion of your graduate studies, and what is your ultimate career goal?
- What is distinct about you that will make you a successful graduate student and future professional in your field?
- What have you experienced that demonstrates your grit, passion or determination to succeed?

Check out our video "Personal Statement Workshop with Dr. Lou Herman, Director of the University Writing Center"

shorturl.at/yEM19

The questions below are designed to help you brainstorm and outline some basic ideas that will serve as the foundation for a well-structured personal statement. Providing detailed answers to these questions, and using personal examples, will help you pinpoint the most interesting aspects of yourself to include in your statement.

Question	Response	Specific Example
What unique characteristic, accomplishment, or experience sets you apart from other candidates?
If a graduate committee were to take away only one thing from reading your statement, what would it be?
When and how did you first become interested in your field of study?
What specific interests do you have within your field of study that align with the program for which you are applying?
Have you had to overcome any unusual hardships or obstacles in your life that impacted your interest in the field you are pursuing? If so, how did your tenacity contribute to you reaching this stage?
Are there any discrepancies in your academic record that require some sort of explanation that should be addressed in your statement?
Why is this program your first choice?
What are your strengths? (i.e. analytical skills, written and/or verbal communication skills)
What experiences can show your determination to complete this graduate program? (i.e. previous work experience, academic or professional competitions)		